A LEARN Center luncheon workshop and discussion

Tuesday, March 18, 2008
12:00-1:30 PM (lunch provided)
University Center 266
Registration Deadline: March 7, 2008

Advances in technology have made the manipulation and distribution of copyrighted material simple and easy. The numerous and very public legal actions taken by copyright holders trying to clamp down on infringing practices have resulted in a tangle of concepts and interpretations. In this environment, educators can easily become confused and frustrated as they try to develop appropriate and acceptable course material.

The primary focus of this workshop will be Copyright in the Classroom. We'll look at the T.E.A.C.H. Act and the differences between the digital and the physical classroom. Considerable time will also be devoted to discussing the Fair Use exception.

By the end of the workshop participants will understand:

- What must be considered when claiming Fair Use
- Why VHS tapes can't always be digitized for use on D2L
- Why you can't put an entire book on E-Reserve

Participants are strongly encouraged to bring questions and share their experiences.
