

The Place of UW-Whitewater Students in the NSSE Universe

The National Survey of Student Engagement (NSSE) was administered to first and fourth-year students from UW-W nine times during the past ten years. This one-hour discussion will explore how our students compare to those from other institutions that participated in the 2010 National survey. In addition to some 80 main survey questions and associated indices of related questions, the results from our recent participation in the NSSE Writing Consortia will be distributed. Our purpose is to gather feedback from UW-W faculty and instructional staff so that the observed pattern of results may be better understood.

Presenter:
Ed Furlong

Ed Furlong is an Associate Institutional Planner in the Office of the Provost at UW Whitewater. He has worked with the National Survey of Student Engagement since 2000, and this fall he led a multi-campus UW team which selected the supplemental NSSE questions for the 2011 administration. Ed earned a Ph.D. in Political Science from Northern Illinois University in 1999 and has worked in various institutional research and assessment capacities at Northern Illinois and Purdue North Central before coming to Whitewater.
