Student Spotlight:

Andi Britton (she/her/hers)

Andi is a third-year student majoring in Women's and Gender Studies. She previously majored in Psychology. Andi is also in her second year of being a Resident Assistant.

What made you decide to change your major? I decided to change my major and minor because I didn't feel passionate about the content I was getting. I wanted to feel a "fire" inside of me when I signed up for classes, and I wasn't feeling that [with psychology].

Who supported you through the major change process? I would say that my advisor supported me the most because she helped me in explore future career options within Women's and Gender studies and be happy with my decision. People outside of school also supported me by encouraging me to be my best self and [to go after my dreams].

What is some advice you have for other students who are considering changing their major? My advice would be to find something that you are passionate about and roll with it! This might look like taking electives based on your interests and asking your advisor about possible careers in those fields. There will always be careers out there, so you might as well find something that makes you happy.

Understanding your AAR

The Academic Advisement Report is a complete match of an individual student's academic course history against a prescribed set of degree program requirements. Accessing and understanding your AAR is a key component to your success.
