About UW-Whitewater

On April 15, 1867, the university was chartered to be an educational institution, and on August 1, 1868, the university opened its doors to 122 students. In 1904, the university became a state-supported institution with the establishment of the University of Wisconsin System. In 2011, the university established a campus in Rock County, now known as UW-Rock County. Today, UW-Whitewater is home to more than 11,000 students, offering a wide range of programs in arts, sciences, business, education, and health sciences. The campus encompasses 400 acres and is located on the Wolf River, about 70 miles west of Milwaukee.
