

Teaching Effectiveness:

"Hit the Mark" Without Saying a Word!

DATE

Monday, February 23rd, 2009

TIME

Noon-1:00pm
(Lunch Will Be Included)

LOCATION

University Center Room 261

Effective teachers are generally effective communicators. But did you know that many of our messages during a normal class period are communicated nonverbally? Students often learn a lot about us based on what we "don't say." Studies have found that appearance, eye contact, facial expression, gestures, touch, vocal behavior, and even use of space impact not only how an instructor is perceived, but how much students are able to learn and later recall. This LEARN Center offering explores what communication researchers have found regarding effective nonverbal communication in the classroom and gives practical suggestions to help you put their findings into practice.
